Company Background Information

ProgrAmerica, Inc. was established as an internet technology company back when the graphics based internet first began to emerge with Netscape Navigator and America Online. Our motto was, "We Have Your Solution To All Things Internet". Our areas of specialization included software engineering and application upgrades, computer repairs, set up and hardware upgrades, ethernet networking, building server side web architecture and client side websites from the ground up, also database engineering, and graphics and data visualization.

From inception ProgrAmerica, Inc. revolutionized scientific computing and the internet through software engineering aimed at developing platform independent dynamic and automated programming capabilities meaning the resulting processing and emulation standards were compatible with the Macintosh, Windows and Unix operating systems all at the same time. For example today you can browse the same internet on any internet capable device. Formerly, webpages had to be programmed with separate sections of code specific to specific browsers or the page wouldn't load.

ProgrAmerica founder and CEO Christine Mouser wrote the closing procedure for the Manhattan Project Hydrocodes in 1998 at Goddard Space Flight Center in The Laboratory For Astronomy And Solar Physics after being recruited by NASA while she was a Junior at St. Xavier University in Chicago majoring in Mathematics, History and Actuarial Science with a minor in Computer Science. In The Laboratory For Extraterrestrial Physics at Goddard Chris also engineered data visualization software for NASA's Near Earth Asteroid Rendezvous Mission (NEAR) that rendered 3-dimensional mappings of A433 Eros from data telemetered back to Earth from the x-ray/gamma-ray spectrometry instrumentation onboard the NEAR Shoemaker Satellite.

In the early 2000's ProgrAmerica shifted focus to alternative fuel and vehicles at Argonne National Laboratory's Transportation Technology Reserearch and Development Division where Christine engineered software that displayed torque as a function of RPM from data fed to it through sensors that connected prototype cars to a computer. Chris was also a programmer for Argonne National Laboratory's Computer Science Division on The Automatic Differentiation of C Project. She used language specific programming where she wrote a program in one language to output an entire program in another language that automatically calculated derivatives. C was the name of the language many original programs were written in. Prior to that, if project scientists wanted to calculate a derivative they had to hand code it to avoid truncation errors due to the memory limitations of computers at that time. Chris was also a programmer on the Atlas / Globus Project in the High Energy Physics Division at Argonne where she developed online database technologies using PHP and PERL.

Christine Mouser's dynamic and automated programming techniques were next extended in the private sector to automate small business and non-profit information systems processes through ProgrAmerica's subsidiary 3rd-i.info in the mid 2000's. She engineered several database applications for Xomix, LTD as contractor for the Illinois Medical District / University of Illinois at Chicago (UIC) Bioinformatics Training Certificate Program (BiTmaP) and also served as Career Development Cordinator where she wrote her own programs to track cohorts, reporting and hiring.

In the late 2000's ProgrAmerica then branched off into bioinformatics in the biotechnology sector in the area of pharmaceuticals and drug discovery at Shamrock Structures where the focus was data visualization for protein crystallography results output by electron microscope x-ray instrumentation, as well as automation of biotech information systems. In present day 2022 with the establishment of its new Blockchain Technology and Development Division, ProgrAmerica has branched off again, this time into the financial sector with the objective of revolutionizing Decentralized Finance (DeFi) and Web 3.0.

Christine Mouser was also a pioneer in the development of the responsive web design technology which allows you to view the same website on a smartphone as well as a computer because the web page has been programmed to dynamically conform to the size of the viewing screen. She also owned and operated one of the very first dot coms and currently owns and operates three, programerica.us, 3rd-i.info and digitalaspectarian.com .

ProgrAmerica accepts great responsibility and prides itself on being, as well as maintaining its role for this long as an industry leader as it has been able to continually evolve in order to hold its position on the forefront of what we know especially as it pertains to the development of emerging technologies.

ProgrAmerica plans to release 5 types of crypto currency tokens in total. In addition to the ProgrAmerica Chris Coin there are three crypto currencies that have been designed but are still in the development stage. These are L' Ace de Denier, The 3rd-i Blitzen and the Crypto Wheel of Fortune. The 5th crypto currency is also in the development stage and has yet to be named.
